projects, a shepherdess herding sheep with a whip, villagers returning home for family reunions, and the lively celebration of the Spring Festival, all depicting the daily life of rural mountain villages. Spring Mountains, music, ballet, ballet. The flowers remain similar year after year, yet the people change with each passing year. During festivals, when the winter wind howls and snowflakes dance, the Spring Festival is ushered in, and the vast fields stretch endlessly in a blanket of white. The paths leading to the mountain village wind and twist, with winding mountain roads reaching toward the horizon. The mountains are lush with dense forests, where roosters crow and dogs bark. Every household slaughters pigs and sheep, adorns their homes with lanterns and decorations, and people of all ages rejoice with high spirits. At temple fairs and stage performances, crowds gather to watch singing, dancing, and traditional opera shows with great attention. In the mountain orchards, shepherds chase after their flocks. Young men and women work vigorously on the construction site to build irrigation canals—a high-standard farmland project for the coming spring. In the distance, a girl drives a bulldozer across the fields; when a young man climbs onto the bulldozer, both beam with smiles. As night falls, the mountain village is lit up by thousands of lights. People work through the night by lamplight, keeping the construction site bustling. The elderly village chief calls everyone to wrap up work and go home. The shepherdess flicks her whip to herd the sheep back into the pen, as snowflakes swirl around her. With New Year's blessings, the village bursts with joy. Braving the wind and snow, people gather together; relatives returning from afar laugh and sing merrily. Snow covers every inch of the land. After a day of hard work, people welcome the arrival of the new year. Children set off firecrackers, and every household decorates with paper-cuts and Spring Festival couplets, filled with happiness and joy. Amidst the ❄️ snowflakes, the panoramic view of the mountain village brims with vitality. Cooking smoke curls gently upward, the bright red sun rises slowly, and in the spring of the mountains, flower buds stand ready to bloom... The language is poetic and vivid, highlighting the winter and spring festive atmosphere of the rural mountain village and the enthusiasm for the construction of high-standard farmland.---
